Interlude

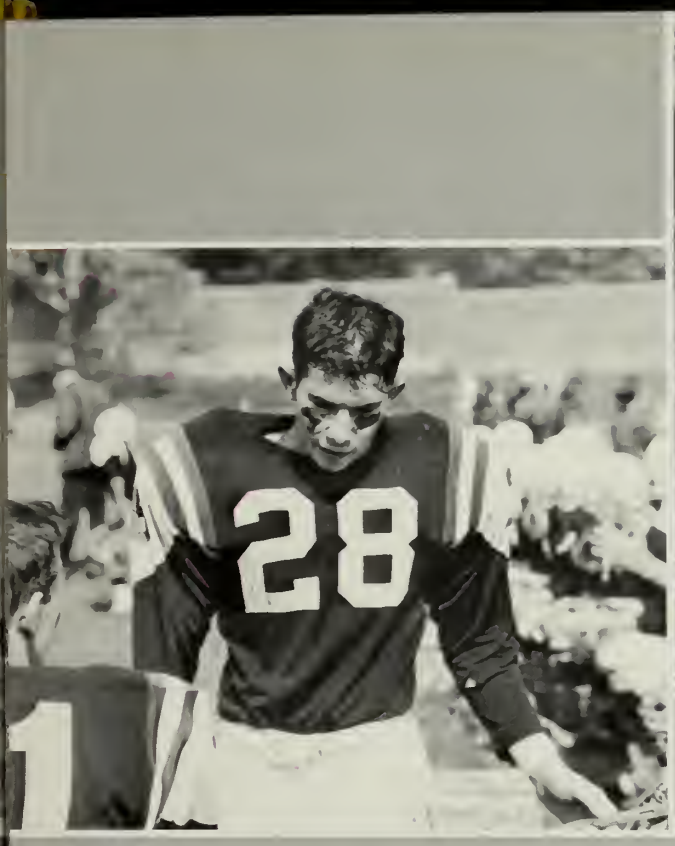
The curtain now about us draws.
Silence and anticipation fill the empty wings,
And now we pause among the jotted illusions of time,
Of memory, of awesome impression.

Years have called a quiet fade to black
On childhood's comic-tragedy.
And yet with no applause to greet us at its close.
It would be most untimely now.

Though we have had the days alone with pleasure,
Upstaging worthless fault with skill and promise,
Our message is not yet heard,
Our bow not yet taken.



We are the players,
A thousand merging wills of separate chance.
Peace. Prestige. Or prejudice and poverty.
Our choice of journey answers the cue our wants deliver.

The interlude has parted; about us, the stage enlightens.
Will eyes close upon us, or will the throng in tribute pause
To hold our names beneath the light, and find who passed this way?
It is not to be known. Our doubt and faith are mingled,

As we linger within the last of a memorable scene
And await act two.

Mary Dunn

Faculty

I am told, at this writing, that new processes and techniques are being used for the '68 yearbook. It is my sincere hope that these will result in an outstanding yearbook for your class. This hope is based on the knowledge that the Brocktonia will be a cherished memento for the majority of your class. Traditionally, in the years to come, there will be certain tangible reminders of your BHS days: report cards, prom and activity souvenirs, senior photos, athletic letters, and of course, your diploma. In a way, the yearbook will be the most outstanding, for it will combine many of these and, again may it deservedly remind you of those pleasant years that passed all too rapidly!

Class Ode

Reaching

We've gained our day of shining light,
Must bid school years good bye.
Let's strive to live so clearly right
Our goals with best can vie,
Then learn to cope with dreadful night,
And wait for dawn's bright sky.

Let's fight to win 'gainst sorry plight,
Yet holding aims most high,
The work to do what we know right
And show our reasons why
We yearn for peace, Oh wondrous sight
With faith on Him rely.
